

The Dual Role of Immigration & Citizenship Law: Exploring Inclusion, Exclusion & Reform for 2025 & Beyond

Thursday, April 3, 2025 – 4 p.m. – 6 p.m. (Eastern time) Friday, April 4, 2025 – 9 a.m. – 4:30 p.m. (Eastern time)

Rutgers Law School, 123 Washington Street, Newark, NJ

Historically and today, immigration and citizenship laws serve as two sides of the same coin in shaping the United States' demographic and cultural landscape. On the one hand, these laws create pathways for inclusion, allowing non-citizens to enter and become permanent members of the country. On the other hand, they establish mechanisms of exclusion, setting barriers that prevent certain non-citizens from entering the United States and removing those who are considered ineligible or undeserving of membership.

The past decade has underscored the dual roles of inclusion and exclusion in immigration and citizenship laws, as the federal, state, and local governments grappled with several key issues, including deportation, artificial intelligence, pathways to citizenship, migrant worker status, and federalism.

The symposium aims to create space for legal scholars, policymakers, lawyers, and advocates to discuss these issues and key questions, including: What should immigration and citizenship laws look like in 2025 and beyond? What values, interests, and needs should be prioritized? Should these laws continue to serve as mechanisms of both inclusion and exclusion? What might an inclusive immigration and citizenship framework look like?

The symposium will honor the contributions of Professor Linda Bosniak (Rutgers Law – Camden) and Alan Hyde (Rutgers Law – Newark), both distinguished scholars in the fields of immigration, citizenship, and labor, who recently retired from teaching at Rutgers Law School.

Co-sponsored by Rutgers University Law Review, Rutgers Law School Center for Immigrant Justice, and Rutgers Law School Institute for Professional Education.
